Adjunct Professor of Psychology

Salary: $725/per credit hour

Warren County Community College is seeking a student-focused and engaging Adjunct Professor of Psychology to teach undergraduate-level Psychology courses. This part-time, in-person daytime position is responsible for providing high-quality instruction that promotes student learning, engagement, and academic success in a supportive classroom environment.

Adjunct instructors are expected to meet regularly scheduled classes, maintain accurate attendance and grading records, provide timely communication and support to students, and assess and report student learning outcomes. Faculty are also expected to comply with all College policies, procedures, and instructional requirements while contributing to a positive and inclusive learning environment.

Qualified candidates must possess a master's degree in psychology or a closely related discipline. Previous college-level teaching experience is preferred. Candidates should demonstrate familiarity with Learning Management Systems, particularly Canvas, along with strong organizational, interpersonal, and communication skills. A student-centered approach to teaching and learning is essential.

The successful candidate will demonstrate enthusiasm for teaching and a commitment to supporting diverse student populations in achieving their academic goals. This position offers the opportunity to join a collaborative academic community dedicated to student success and educational excellence.
